You Can Have Your Cell and Eat It Too!

By: Mallory Hapeman

Once a year Ms. Bullard's biology classes make an edible cell. Students use their imagination to make a goodie that has all the parts of either an animal cell or a plant cell. Ms. Bullard shared her thoughts of this day with me.

- Q. What is the purpose of edible cell day?
A. To have the students think about each organelle in the cell. Be creative and have fun eating the results!
- Q. What is the best edible cell you've seen?
A. An all-chocolate plant cell! Yum!
- Q. How long have you been doing edible cell day?
A. About 10 years.
- Q. How does it help students understand the cell?
A. Whatever they decide to use must resemble the organelles and hopefully they can remember what they used for each organelle.
- Q. How did you get the idea of edible cell day?
A. At a workshop at the Mt. Vernon Conference
- Q. How do you earn a good grade on the cell?
A. By including all required organelles and knowing what each part represents.

Freshman Bria McKinzie shows off her Edible Cell.

FOR YOUR HEALTH: WHS is concerned about the health and safety of the Woodlawn community. Due to the recent cases of MRSA (Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus), our school has developed a more strenuous cleaning schedule, as well as distributed parent letters to all WHS students about MRSA, and posted information around school. There have been no confirmed cases at WHS. We continue to encourage basic hygiene, especially hand washing by all students and staff. For more information about MRSA, please visit: <http://www.idph.state.il.us>
